Home Gardens Help Fight Hunger

Each growing season, Food Bank of Iowa welcomes tens of thousands of pounds of fresh vegetables and fruit from backyard gardeners, corporate gardens such as those at Farm Bureau and John Deere, and the garden at the Newton Correctional Facility. The latter is the largest donor, providing about 76,000 pounds of fresh produce last year, according to Emily Shearer, Food Bank of Iowa's food acquisition coordinator.

Perhaps the most unexpected partner in providing a garden bounty is Iowa Gardening for Good, a project created by Tracy and Doreen Blackmer.
